Penny Love is a psychoanalytic psychotherapist from Brisbane, Australia. She has practiced for over forty years in a wide range of settings, both public and private. She has worked with adults, families, children and babies. This has included adults in long-term psychoanalytic psychotherapy, mothers together with their babies, work with terminally ill children and their families, and sick babies, especially premature babies and their parents and the staff who attend them. She also leads Balint groups for doctors and mental health clinicians, and trains Balint leaders. She is currently researching ways to prevent and deal with PTSD in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit and Special Care Nursery, focusing on babies, mothers and staff.

Penny has been actively involved in several professional organisations. She was a founding member of the Balint Society of Australia (now the Balint Society of Australia and New Zealand) in 2005, served as a Board member for several years and currently chairs an advisory committee which oversees intensive training events for Balint group leaders. She has served on the Council of the Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy Association of Australasia. She is currently Chair of Ongoing Education for the Queensland Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy Association.

Central to Penny’s work is the importance of the earliest stages of mental development. Her work with both adults and babies aims to contain the mind along with its damaged or traumatised parts, so as to allow new links and attachments to form, and leading to the development of mental processes replacing those which were damaged.

In working with doctors, nurses and other practitioners, Penny focuses on the effect that the patient’s distress has on the practitioner and how, if this is not acknowledged and processed it may have long term detrimental effects, such as disinterest in patients’ emotional states and other manifestations of burnout.

Anna McKie’s life journey has meandered through an undergraduate Degree in Mathematics and Computer Science, a Diploma of Education, working in the organics industry and co-ordinating major international conferences before completing a Diploma in Contemporary Somatic Psychotherapy at the Australian College of Contemporary Somatic Psychotherapy under Jeff Barlow.

Anna has been working as a Somatic Psychotherapist seeing clients in private practice since 2008 and also works part-time as a specialist trauma counsellor on the 1800 Respect phone service. She works in an embodied, relational, trauma informed, empathic way with clients and is passionate about the intersubjective space, attachment theory, contemporary trauma theory, the body in therapy including therapeutic touch, and neuroscience and its relation to psychotherapy.
